New Release:

Over Half a Million Irish Parish Records newly released by TheGenealogist

Another whole county's worth of Irish parish records now bolsters the record collections of TheGenealogist! Today, one of the leading providers of family history resources has added the records of 510,007 individuals from County Laois to its site in their latest release.

[County Laois, once known as Queen's County from 1556 to 1922]

County Laois, once known as Queen's County from 1556 to 1922, is a double landlocked county in the Eastern and Midland Region of the Republic of Ireland. As the Irish diaspora has spread out across the globe, especially during the terrible events of the Great Famine of 1845–49 which devastated the county at the time, many people from across the world will be able to trace their roots back to this part of Ireland.

Searching TheGenealogist's transcriptions provides an easy way to find records which then provides a handy link to the National Library of Ireland (NLI) in order to see the digitised image of the actual register. TheGenealogist's transcription greatly benefits from its powerful SmartSearch that can be used to identify possible siblings, as well as parent's potential marriage details.

To find out more about how to use these records see TheGenealogist's article: Searching for ancestors in the Laois parish records
